The recent winter snowfalls brought with it beautiful scenic transformations to the Norwell Public Library and surrounding landscape. The Library's construction has steadily progressed over the last few months and is near complete!

On the exterior, the Alaskan yellow cedar trim around the building is complete with a few finishing touches left for metal trim and slate shingles.

Inside the building all finish floors are installed including carpet, tile and maple wood flooring. This is a big milestone for the project and helps give a sense of how the building will feel when complete. Walls have been finish painted and the millwork installation is being finalized.

The circulation, info and reference desks are feature pieces in their respective spaces.

As the interior spaces near completion, the next major items are the delivery of the furniture and book shelving which will finally define the spatial layout of the large Adult's and Children's Reading Rooms.

The project team and all involved are very excited as the Norwell Public Library will reach its completion very soon.
