My Darling Girl

by Jennifer McMahon

Mommy Dearest meets the Exorcist. The creep factor is palpable, as is the suspense. A woman who was abused as a child by her now dying mother agrees to take her into her home. Her mother vacillates between a loving grandmother and an evil woman. I made the mistake of reading this at night. Don't make the same mistake.

A House With Good Bones

by T. Kingfisher

I loved this Southern Gothic novel! It was funny, clever, scary, a little heart-pounding and I learned a lot about bugs, roses and vultures. There were laugh-out-loud moments and shivering OMG moments.

Bird Box

by Josh Malerman

Josh Malerman is one scary writer! If I could read his novels while peeking out between my fingers, I would. The story goes back and forth between now and back to when the unseen terror begins. Unseen being the key word - if you see these beings you go crazy.

Misery

by Stephen King

I was in turn horrified, terrified, petrified and just plain scared witless. Annie Wilkes is a psycho beyond compare - and her captive Paul Sheldon made me want to weep for him. Not for the faint of heart. I love this book and haven't been able to stop talking about it. I highly recommend the audio!
